Café StayWoke in Gurugram's Worldmark makes its patrons experience true luxury and sophistication, says SHAMBHAVI SURI

TASTE OF

s the fall season is upon

A us, we crave to soak up the romanticised golden fall sunshine. Café StayWoke, located in the heart of Gurugram's Worldmark, is just the place to do so. Walking into the café, a strong yet pleasing whiff of freshly brewed coffee took over my senses. The café, resembling a beautiful glass cube, had the golden-hour sun brimming through the glass walls adding to the aesthetic. It offers both indoor and outdoor seating options. The black and golden décor adds a touch of elegance and sophistication to the café. The elegant, full-sized coffee bar at the centre, is truly the heart and soul of this Once I was shown to my table, I noticed the raw yet matte-finished tables with a pot of pink-brocade plant acting as the centrepiece. Shortly after, two refreshing drinks were brought to the table. The first one was the StayWoke lemonade, which resembled the taste of a virgin mojito minty lemony goodness minus the calories! The other drink was a Kaffir lime kombucha served in an elegant flute glass. This was extremely refreshing with a strong punch from the kaffir lime leaves, leaving a sweet and fragrant after taste.

This refreshing drink was paired with a slightly spicy and tangy Chicken ghee roast. Served in a beautiful black ceramic plate, the colours of the bright red chicken popped on the plate. The chicken was paired with fried South Indian papadam, garnished with coconut shavings. This South Indian signature dish had just the right amount of heat, tingling my taste buds gently. The tanginess from the tomatoes and strong flavour from the curry leaves and the mustard seeds defined the dish. These bold flavours of the south made the dish near-perfect.

The next dish was the Avocado toast. This superfood has garnered a lot of attention in recent years but no restaurant makes their avocado toast the way Café StayWoke did. Served over either a sourdough or focaccia bread slice, the avocados were mashed combined with some cream cheese, finely chopped onions, coriander, topped with hemp oil and pomegranate seeds.

This version of the classic avocado toast caters to the Indian palate and showcases the versatility of an avocado. The sweetness from the pomegranate and crunchiness from the onions with a hint of garlic worked well together.

On the table next was the Keema appam which took me on yet another trip to South India. The chicken keema rested on a bed of appam, topped with a beautifully poached egg. As I ran my spoon over the egg, the delicate white covering tore, giving way to the runny yolk that perfectly covered the keema. The appam was crispy on the outside yet light and fluffy on the inside. The keema, tossed in a variety of spices, had a strong flavour of the comforting curry leaves. The best part about this entire dish was the lightness of the meal. One can comfortably eat an entire plate and not be over-stuffed!

For the mains, I had the Vegetarian green Thai curry and the Orange chilli chicken. As for the Thai curry, the veggies are served separately for those who don't prefer a lot of veggies in their curry. The curry is served with kaffir lime rice, which adds a touch of freshness to the heavy and thick curry. The flavours of the Thai curry and rice is as authentic as it can get and is a must-try! On the other hand, the fragrant chilli chicken is more on the sweeter side with just a dash of heat. The chicken so soft and tender on the inside and crunchy on the outside, wrapped in the thick, shining orange glaze will have you craving more.

Finally, it was time to end my day with some dessert. I was served the signature Cloud pudding. Made with tender coconut, this dessert was a set and had the consistency resembling that of a panna cotta. Served on a banana leaf, this soft, gooey coconut deliciousness was the perfect way to end a satisfying meal. At Café StayWoke, the vibe is relaxed, the food is delicious and the staff is courteous. If you're looking to have a good time with some delicious plates of food from around the world while soaking the sun and connecting with nature, this may just be the place for you.

Convenience vs health

Against the backdrop of these fast-paced times, DR MINAL KABRA poses an important question; whether packaged foods are focussed on your well-being?

n the last few years, the Lonvenience food industry has shown rapid growth in India. About 79 per cent of Indian consumers prefer to have instant food due to time constraints as indicated by the recent survey conducted by the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry of India (ASSOCHAM). As per market reports, the convenience food segment is expected to show a volume growth of 5.8 per cent in 2022. This can mainly be attributed to a busier lifestyle, the growing number of nuclear families and more people preferring to work late hours. During the pandemic, as people started to work from home, the demand for convenience food spiked, and all estimates suggest the trend will continue to grow.

However, what changed after Covid is the consumers' tendency to be health-conscious of the food they consume. You see, most packaged food is loaded with preservatives, chemicals and highly unhealthy ingredients like refined flour and refined sugar. These ingredients not only help increase the shelf life of the food but also give them their addictive flavour that makes the consumer want more and more. So, while they do offer the convenience of carrying and eating wherever you wish, their health impact is alarming, to say the least.

Post-pandemic, most consumers are relooking at immunity and the role of food in building the same. The food industry in turn has reciprocated with the two overarching themes of products with better immunity and products with better nutrition for a healthy lifestyle.

But the big question is whether the products being pitched as healthy or immunity-boosting offer these benefits or are they just trying to ride the wave and manipulate the consumers? The answer is always written on the package. The Food Safety and Standards Authority of India (FSSAI) mandates every manufacturer to specify the list of ingredients used to make any packaged product. And while most of us tend to not consider this key aspect of the package, that is where one should look to understand the health quotient of the offered product.

To put it generally, prefer millets over wheat, wholegrain flour over refined flour, jaggery or maple over refined sugar. Any product that has a list of chemicals and raising agents or names that you don't consider as natural food, should be avoided. Another hint is to look for shelf life as there is a limit to how long you can store a completely natural food without adding artificial preservatives. So anything that has a shelf life of over five months is bound to have artificial preservatives unless it is stored at sub-zero temperatures or in a well-designed tetrapack.

These guidelines would most probably eliminate most of the offerings of major multinationals es we make.

as their scale of operations make it necessary to have a longer shelf life and be more addictive. This specific gap has opened the gates for several young start-ups that cater to niche demands by making smaller batches and delivering them fresh through their websites or modern e-commerce platforms. Lastly, since we live in a connected world, our health is directly dependent on the health of our fellow

beings and the health of our environment. For a portion of truly

healthy food, we as should consumers demand food that has a positive socio-environmental impact by using eco-friendly technologies to procure, process and deliver the food and creating a social balance by offering livelihood opportunities to rural India.

It is only when we start looking holistically that we truly appreciate the potential health impact of the food choic-
